

Donna Pierce-Clark

Upon graduation from Wright State University, Donna began teaching Secondary Art at Fairlawn High School in Sidney, Ohio. Personal growth as an artist led her to watercolor and oil painting workshops under many internationally known artists. Much like the wet-into-wet watercolor technique, she also paints Alla Prima oils. A member of Dailypaintworks.com, Donna paints and posts on this website, daily small works, updates her own website, and sends out her weekly blog and Newsletter. As well as painting professionally and teaching watercolors and oils at the Troy Hayner Cultural Center in Troy, Ohio, she also teaches private students in her studio in Springfield, Ohio.

"Transparency and movement dominate both my landscapes and my still life works. Just as I love the movement of rolling hills or ocean waves, swaying tree limbs, and grasses in nature, I am mesmerized by soft folds in fabric as they roll beneath and around the objects in a still life. When painting En Plein Air, my spiritual senses are awakened as I study shapes, colors, and changing light. My preferred subjects, above all, are dynamic oceanic scenes. The sparkling, transparent waters of my landscapes are mirrored by reflections of cut glass and other objects in my still life paintings."
